Fear not a ransomware attack, this can unlock

KV KURUMANATH

Hyderabad, August 11

The two recent global ransomware Wannacry and Petya have sent shivers down the spine of organisations in particular PC users in general. The very idea that a hacker sitting in a remote corner of the world can lock your computer up and demand ransom money for releasing the data back.

There have been instances of organisations and people paying digital currencies to their databack. But Check Point Software Technologies, Inc., says it is at the end of the world. It claims that one can retrieve every hacker has been encrypted by. "The attacks are bound to happen as someone in the organisation is going to click malicious attachment. You can't prevent it. But we can take remedial measures so that you don't lose data," Venugopal Pre-Sales Director (India)
